Introducing Audo's Androgyne Lounge Table in striking Italian marble.

Part of Copenhagen-based Norwegian architect and designer Danielle Siggerud's Androgyne Collection for Audo, the artistic lounge table profiles harmonious proportions and elegant natural materials. The latest iteration of the popular design is crafted in Calacatta Viola marble, a beautiful off-white marble with characteristic purple veining. Honouring craftsmanship tradition and modern living, its sculptural form adds an artistic silhouette to any room.

Both top and base are available in the Italian marble, making it possible to mix and match with other materials in the collection – including Kunis Breccia stone and a range of wood types and finishes – to create an expression to suit any space and style.

“The versatile piece lets you create personal spaces suited to the context, place and function it will become a part of,” notes Danielle Siggerud.

The Androgyne Lounge Table is both purposeful and powerful when placed everywhere from hotel lobbies and private living rooms to exhibition spaces and office reception areas. Its versatile design does double duty as a lounge table or bench for piles of books or decorative objects.

About the designer

Danielle Siggerud is a Norwegian architect based in Copenhagen. She holds an MAA from the Royal Academy of Fine Arts in Denmark and has previously worked with renowned architect John Pawson in London. She established her Copenhagen studio in 2016.
